HEALTH BRIEFS

SHHS offers new line of services for cancer patients

Southeastern Home Health Services of Blue Bell announces the launch of a new line of specialized oncology services for cancer patients in the southeast region of Pennsylvania.

The new specialty service, Oncology Home Care is not a hospice program but rather one that focuses on supporting a patient at home with the same level of specialty attention they receive in other health care settings.

The care is designed to get a patient back on his or her feet and to return to a normal life as soon as possible.

The oncology staff has both specialized training and expertise to deliver highly skilled care, anticipate and recognize needs, provide prompt intervention if problems arise and help decrease hospitalizations, according to press information.

Cancer rehabilitation is the goal and primary focus in the oncology program.

Just as in other aspects of the company's home care program, it strives to promote patient and caregiver independence by anticipating and responding to physical and psychosocial needs.

"We want our patients to rehabilitate to their optimum level of independence. Whatever a patient's needs might be, we want to address them with the same high quality of care you have come to expect from us," notes press information.

Anyone who has been diagnosed or has had a family member or friend diagnosed with cancer and could benefit from home care during treatment or recuperation, can call at 866-285-2007 or visit us at: www.sehealth.com.
